Not illustrated. 1860 Excerpt: ...may be sunken by a slight incision, which would allow the already useless organ to subside. The parts would thereby retract; the cause of excitement in a great measure be arrested; and the unseemly appearance of that portion of the features removed. General hygienic principles are to be carried out with some degree of persistency. The diet for a few days ought to be of a vegetable nature. Let her avoid, as far as possible, taking cold and all will go well. The other eye fortunately seems to be in no way affected. Case LX--FRACTURE OF RADIUS AND ULNA. John Mulvey, aet. 5 years, was brought to the Clinique by his mother, to receive the advice of Dr. Mott relative to a deformity that had followed the union of the fractured bones. Two months before the little boy had fallen on his fore-arm, fracturing the radius and ulna by the violence of his descent. The attending surgeon had applied the proper bandages and splints, and all had terminated favorably. Passive motion had been gone through with, and the boy recovered with an entire use of all his fingers, his wrist and both the bones of the fore-arm. But, on closely examining the healed extremity, it could be clearly seen that an abnormal curve indicated that the bones had united out of a straight line, interfering in some degree with the entire mobility of parts or natural length of the limb. In every other respect the child enjoyed perfect health, and the mother was only anxious that no irregularity of outline should disfigure the symmetry of his proportions. Treatment.--Professor Mott then examined the arm of the boy, and ascertained that the bones had united in a proper manner. The See page 90. flexion and extension of the ulna were normal; and on pronating and supinating the radius, nothing could be detected...
